Uhh what the heck. Apparently steam says I now have 20p credit in my wallet. Going into my transactions it shows "Wallet 10 py6. Credit" where the hell did this come from.
e: And I just got an email saying I've successfully added 10 rubles into my steam wallet. I have steamguard, my gmail password is different from steam and I have mobile authentication turned on too. What the fuck is happening.

Did you list a single card on the market by chance?
Nope. I've not put any cards on the market for a while. The last card I sold was on the 21st of May.

Change your password and contact Steam support. I guess.
Yeah in the process right now. You'd think if something like this happens steamguard would have emailed me but nothing. 10 rubles just magically showed up in my wallet.

It's under store transactions as "wallet credit". The last time I sold something on the market was May 21st. 🙄

Right now I'm just disconnecting my PC and doing a full spybot scan and will change passwords after. Another weird thing is that steam community.com is in German for some strange reason.

You may want to check your email (if you use Gmail, specifically check the account activity detail link at the bottom of your inbox), check for odd IP's/different countries, if SteamGuard was active I find it hard to believe someone got in without first compromising your email. Also, with Steam, you should deauthorize all other computers right now.
Will do! I just did a full sweep and clean with spybot and steam isn't authed with any other computer. Just mine.
e: Absolutely no suspicious activity in gmail. It's all my computer and my IP.

Welp I've done everything I can on my end. Now it's just up to steam support to solve the case of the mysterious rubles.
